Having ascertained who Gen. Washington's last English ancestor was-it has taken a century and a half to do so -his grateful countrymen are now trying to prove that this gentleman, Rev. Lawrence Washington, rector of Purleigh in Essex, was not a drunkard and a malignant in the English revolution of 1640. And my college classmate, Mr. H. F. Waters, who is always discovering something, has found a letter in the Bodleian library speaking well of Parson Washington, writes F. B. Sanborn in the Boston Advertiser.

The writer, one Mr. Ayloffe, about 1706, says; "I doe not remember that ever I knew or heard of Mr. Washington before he had been sequestered, but there was then one Mr. Roberts, a neighbor of mine, who was owner and patron of a parish to small that nobody would accept of his church (but with difficulty) and Mr. Roberts entertained Mr. Washington, where he was suffered quietly to preach. I have heard him and tooke him to be a very worthy pious man. I have been in his company there, and he appeared a very modest sober person, and I heard him recommended an such by several gentle-men who knew him before I did. He was a loyal person, and had one of the best benefices in these parts, and this was the onely cause of his expulsion as I verily believe."

Lat it be remembered by "sequestered" Mr. Ayloffe meant turned out of his parish of Parleigh by the Puritans, at some time before 1653, when this Lawrence Washington died. As this was nearly sixty years before Mr. Ayloffe wrote, the Liter must have been a young man when he heard the parson preach. He lived at Great Braxted in Essex, and the little parish of Mr. Roberts was in the adjoining district of Branted Parva, or Little Brexted. Purleith is not far off, and Malden (for which our Malden is named) is three miles north of Purleigh. Parson Washington was buried at Malden in January, 1653, and four or five years later his two sons emigrated to Virginia. By piecing all these trifles together we get at a sort of history of this Lawrence Washington, thanks to

The English ancestry of Daniel Webster is partly kn wn, but there is room for Mr. Waters to look it up further, both on the Webster side and that of Rev. Stephen Bachiler, from whom. through his grandmother, he was descended. This elergyman was also turned out of his parish, but for being a Puritan, which could hardly be charged Webster. A writer in the Transcript tells one of the numerous stories that I have heard about Webster's neglect to pay his debts. He says: "When I was a clerk in an exchange office we received a draft of a few hundred dollars on Mr. Webster on sight for collection. We were instructed to present it to the eminent man for acceptance, payable at any future time he chose; 'tell him to specify his own This was rather unusual and showed the great respect the creditor had for the distinguished statesman."

This respect was natural enough, for Webster was at that time almost idolized by many. But it did not secure from the great man the payment of the draft, either then or afterward. The Transcript correspondent goes on: "I politely said: 'You need not pay the draft at once; take your own time; accept it payable when convenient, or when you please.' He straightened back, and, his penetrating eyes almost blinding me, said: 'You are the politest broker I have ever met,' and accepted it at once, 'payable in sixty days.' My instructions were such that if he had said on its face, 'Payable on the resurrection day,' I should have taken it and considered it honored. No attention was paid to it when the sixty days expired and I returned it under protest to the sender." It was the frequent occurrence of incidents like this which gave point to the retort said to have been made some years earlier by a witness in court whom Webster was cross-examining. Being asked his occupation the witness declined to answer; this roused Webster's suspicions and he insisted on a reply which the judge to'd the witness he had better give. "Well." said the witness "if I must tell you my means of support it is this: I make notes, get them indorsed and discounted, take the money and leave my indorsers to pay the note. Everybody in court expected some stinging reply to this, but Webster som-ply said: "Let me tell you, sir, that, although highly respectable, that is a very precarious occupation."

Man-Enting Wild Men. In the celebrated "Travailes" of Edward Webb (1590) are dozens of stories that would make Joe Mulhatton turn green with envy. One of the most celebrated of these is his story of the wild men of Prester John, which is as fallows: "In the court of Prester John there is a wilde man, and another in the high street of Constantinople, whose allowance is every day a quarter of raw mutton; and when any man dyeth for some notorious offence, then they are allowed every day a quarter of man' flesh. These wilde men are chained fast to a post every day, the one in Prester John's court, the other in the high street of Constantinople, each of them having a mentell about their shoulders, and all over their bodies they have wonderful long haire. They are chained by the nee'r lest they speedily devour all that cometh within their Preserving Dead Bodles.

Herodotus gives a remarkable description of the manner in which the Ethiopians were accustomed to preserve their dead. According to his account, having dried the body, they plastered it over with gypsum and painted it so as to make it resemble life as nearly as possible. Then they put in a hollow column made of crystal, which material they dug up in abundance. Thus inclosed, the corpse was kept in the house of its nearest surviving relations for a year, after which it was buried.

THE SIZE OF AUSTRALIA.

New South Wales as Large us Our Origi-

Among the tacit misconceptions into which distant critics are most likely to fall about antipodean affairs is that which is based upon ignor; nee of the enormous area and possibilities of the colonies, says Scribner's Magazine. Especially 's this likely in the United States, where the assumption may be that, as the population of Australia is about the same as that of the thurteen original scaboard colonies of America, the surface over which they are distributed is also approximately the same. As a matter of fact there is no such

New South Wales alone is as large as they were: Tasmania, the Rhode Island of Australia, is as large as that state with New Jersey, New Hampshire and Massachusetts added; Victoria, the smallest colony of the continent, is equal in size to Great Britain: Queensand surpasses the united areas of Austria, France and Germany; South Australia, one-third greater than Queensland, is nearly as large as western Australia, which of itself has nearly four times the extent of Texas, while the two colonies together are larger than the whole of Europe without Russia. The seven colonies between them occupy a territory greater than that of the United States excluding Alaska. It is true that at present Australia has barely four million inhabitants, but these immense areas represent a potential population to which it is impossible to set bounds.

No part of the continent is so hot and so unhealthy as to forbid white settlement, and if the strip of low-lying coast lands in the north be omitted there is no part of it yet colonized in which Europeans cannot work.

Port Darwin, the country about the guif of Carpentaria, and an indefinite belt toward the northwest, lie within the tropics, and are suitable for tropical productions; but the high plateau of northern Queensland, which runs close to the sea, is found thoroughly healthy for English miners and graziers, and enjoys a bracing winter. The back country, though waterless by comparison with the Mississippi valley, is able to carry stock well in most seasons, and with wells, tanks and dams mey be made to do so in all years. The desert country of eastern Australia has yet to be found.

Seventy, Has Been Around the World and Never Worked Nor Drank.

"I never worked: I was never in a poorhouse: I am a professional tramp; yes, gentlemen, a protessional tramp; but I never begred of anybody. I tramped over the world twice, yet there is nobedy who can say an ill word of me. People took sympathy on methat is how I got along: they fed and clothed me and gave me shelter. This, gentlemen, has been my life for fiftyeight years."

In this strain Joseph Clinton, an emaciated and weather-scarred old man of nearly seventy years, told his pathetic story to the officials at the Philadelphia hospital the other day, says the Philadelphia Record. Despite his worn and broken-down appearance he has the refinement of one used to better things, and one whom hard experience has taught much.

When but eight years old both of Clinton's parents died and left him alone. He admits with candor that he has never done a stroke of work in his life. He has simply existed. In winter his sleep was snatched in barns, with blankets pitying neighbors gave him to shield him from the cold. In summer he sought rest on the grass. It was a mortifying event to the crip-pled old man to be compelled to enter a workhouse. Unusually intelligent, he asserts that he never touched a drop of liquor, while his language is easy and fluent, and his gener. I deportment that of a man in easy circumstances.

An entire commune in France, that of Murat, recently went over to Protestantsm. The bishop of Cahors was asked to grant the right to hear two masses instead of one every Sunday in the parish church, as many had to go a long distance and it was often inconvenient to set out early. He refused in what seemed to them haughty terms, saying that, as Christ submitted to be creucified for their sakes, if they could not get out of their beds early in the morning to be in time for church they were not worthy of the name of Catholics. This caused great offense. A public meeting was held on the church green, and a petition was sent to the minister of public worship to give the community a Protestant paster. A Protestant elergyman was secured, who, when he went to preach his first sermon in an improvised temple, found there an enthusiastic congregation of a hundred

A Wandering Bottle. A bottle filled with whisky by a New York liquor dealer, and carried to sea by a New Yorker bound for Europe, lately reached the liquor dealer again, after many months and through a strange channel. A friend of the traveler affirms that the bottle, emptied of its contents, was thrown overboard while the ship was still for from shore, but the liquor dealer is equally positive that the bottle came back to him in a case of rum imported from the West

A Tree with a History.

One hundred years ago a Mr. Marr, of Cape Elizabeth, Me., set out a willow slip, which grew to be a good-sized tree. Mr. Marr was an obliging sort of person, and he kept his grindstone-one of the few in that vicinity—under the willow by the roadside for the convenience of his neighbors. Some of the neighbors were ungrateful yokels, for often, when they had done grinding their axes, they would try the blades upon the sheltering tree, so that its beauty was spoiled and its life endangered. Then Farmer Marr drove a lot of spikes into the trunk, covering the heads artfully with bark, and when the neighboring vandals had spoiled a few axes they quit trying edges on the willow. Marr and his neighbors are all dead and forgotten these lifty years, but the wil-low still flourishes, and the ax marks are obliterated, while the protecting spikes are grown deep in the heart of the great trunk.
